In the garden of my heart, you were the brightest bloom
A blossom of wisdom, love, and light, Now, the world feels like an empty room.
Since you took your final flight.

Your hands, so gentle, nurtured with care
From the smallest seed to the tallest tree.
You taught me how to love, to share,
Seeing the world with eyes set free

Your stories, like threads of gold, weave the fabric of my days.
In every word, a lesson told in every glance, your loving gaze.

You were the warmth in winters chill,
The shade in summer's heat
A grandmother's love, a steadfast will.
A presence so kind, so sweet.

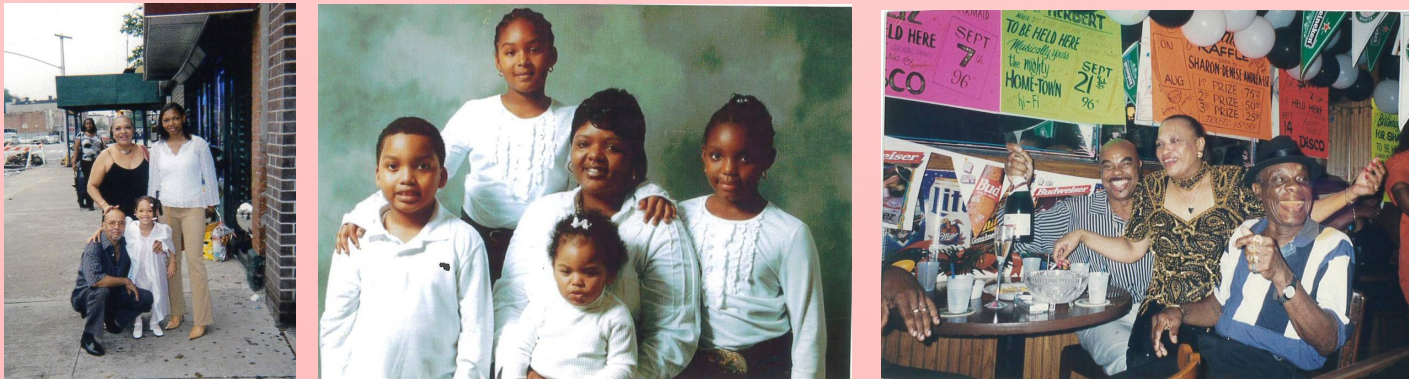

Though you've gone to rest, your memories stay, In every breeze, in the softest rays,
in the laughter of children, In their playful ways,
In the quiet moments of my days.

Today we gathered, hearts heavy, and bright eyes.
To honor a life that shone so brightly.
A grandmother, now a guiding star, whose love will remain, no matter how far.

Rest now, dear grandma, In peace, in grace.
But now you live on, in every place, for a grandmother's love, pure and true,
Will forever bloom in all we do.
