A Son's Light

The house feels vast, the silence deep,
Since you, my son, have fallen asleep.

No joyful shouts, no hurried pace,
Just echoes of your loving grace.

Your laughter, once so bright and clear,

Now lingers, a bittersweet tear.

We search for you in every room,

Lost in the shadows of this gloom.

But memories, like stars at night,

Shine on, a beacon, warm and bright.

We hold them close, these precious keeps,

Of all the joy your spirit keeps.

Though pain may linger, deep and true,

Our love for you, my son, is new.

And though you're gone, your light remains,

A guiding star through joy and pains.
