A Sister, An Aunt, A Lasting Light

She was a sister, strong and true, A steady heart the family knew.
With gentle words and caring hands, she offered love that still withstands.

She was an aunt whose smile could brighten Even the darkest, hardest day.
Through laughter shared and lessons given, she helped to guide us on our way.

She celebrated joys and dreams, encouraged hope when hope seemed small.
Her kindness touched so many lives, and her warm spirit welcomed all.

Though we must now say our goodbyes, her memory will remain near.
In every story told with love, in every smile, we feel her here.

The bond she built can never fade, nor can the love she freely gave.
She lives within our hearts forever, a treasured gift time cannot take.

Today we honor all she was-A sister, aunt, and cherished friend.
Her love will be our guiding light, A light that never reaches end.

Reflections of the Life of
Ms. Tara Jean Satterfield

Ms. Tara Jean Satterfield was born June 13, 1962, in Columbia, South Carolina to the late Fred D. Satterfield and Ellen McCoy Satterfield. On Friday morning, June 19, 2026, Tara peacefully departed this life at home, surrounded by the love and presence of her family.

Tara was a loving, kind, and spirited person who cherished her family, friends, college family, and sorority sisters. She was educated in the public schools of Columbia, South Carolina, and graduated from C.A. Johnson High School, Class of 1979. She furthered her education at Livingstone College, in Salisbury, North Carolina, graduating with the Class of 1979, where she developed lifelong bonds and treasured friendships.

She loved her Livingstone family dearly. Tara made every effort not to miss homecomings or the CIAA Tournaments, where Livingstone was always proudly represented. She spoke often and fondly of her Livingstone crew, who gathered frequently and shared many joyful memories. Tara was known as the homecoming room organizer and always looked forward to planning her outfits. A true fashionista, she had a passion for style, her hats and boots became her signature look.

Tara was the thirteenth child, born on the thirteenth day of the month. Spiritually, the number thirteen represents transformation, the completion of a cycle, and rebirth- a meaning that beautifully reflects Tara’s journey of strength, faith, and grace. She was also a devoted member of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority Incorporated, an organization she loved dearly.

In addition to her parents, Tara was preceded in death by her sisters, Mattie McCoy Davis and Dorothy McCoy Chestnut; and brothers, John McCoy, Louis McCoy, Elijah McCoy, Charles McCoy, Frank McCoy, Barry McCoy, and Benjamin McCoy.

Ms. Tara Jean Satterfield leaves to cherish her precious memory: her sisters, Mary McCoy Wilson, of Columbia, South Carolina, Barbara McCoy Hunter, of Brooklyn, New York, and Annette Williams, of Columbia, South Carolina. She also leaves her devoted nephew, Antoine Williams, who was her rock and stood beside her throughout her health challenges; her best friend and sister since childhood, Paige Jeter Moore; a host of nieces, nephews, childhood friends, college friends, sorority sisters, and loved ones. Tara especially cherished her nieces and nephews, including Karen Wilson-Adams and the late Natasha (Pee Wee) Wilson, with whom she grew up in the same household with.

Tara was steadfast, faithful, and deeply loved the Lord. She accepted life’s challenges with courage and grace. One of her favorite sayings was, “Ain’t God Good?” She was a fighter, and did not fear death, for she knew her earthly work was complete. Tara’s life was a beautiful testimony of love, faith, fashion, friendship, and family. Her memory will remain forever in the hearts of all who knew and loved her.
